Dear Louise,
As stated in the advice letter requesting that a condition be attached for submission of the archive, no further fieldwork is necessary. The archive is a collection of material (drawn records, archaeological artefacts, field notes, photographic record, a copy of the report etc) recording the programme of work undertaken and any archaeological remains encountered, in this instance, primarily medieval pottery. We do not hold this archive ourselves. The archaeological contractor will deposit it with the Museums Service where it is stored in perpetuity. In this way, the preservation by record of remains disturbed by development is achieved, in line with PPG 16.
The requested condition states that the submission of the archive "should be completed in accordance with the agreed scheme of work, which has been approved on behalf of the planning authority". This scheme of work is laid out in the specification for the trial trenching (attached) that was undertaken and section 6.3 of it states that the archive will be deposited within six months of completion of the fieldwork. The fieldwork was undertaken at the end of April.
The addition of this condition is something of a 'belts and braces' approach, to make sure that the project is completed and the objectives met. If having the condition outstanding for this length of time is problematic, the we would ask you to confirm that your enforcement team can enforce the specification and if necessary, secure the deposition of the archive in that way.

Lucy

You have requested a condition regarding the submission of achive material. Could you please confirm when the material is required as this needs to be built into the condition. Is there anymore work on site required prior to commencement please or is it just a case of submitting the final written info to you, in any event I think we need to make that clear in the condition.

The decision needs to go out on Monday. I am out of the office, please copy James Hicks in on your reply and he will deal with this for me.

Thanks

Louise
